

AI for Family Law

From custody disputes to divorce proceedings, family lawyers often have to juggle multiple complex cases at once. Alexi introduces speed and accuracy into their daily processes, increasing the bandwidth for client focus and support.

The screenshot displays the Alexi AI interface for a family law case. On the left, a sidebar lists 'Matters' categorized by time: Today (Chang v. Smith A7779, Brown v. Truman A7435), Yesterday (Adoption of Esme Brown B7445), Last 7 days (Equitable distribution o..., Patel v Gomez P7A47), Last 30 days (Visitation rights for ste...), and Last 12 months (Parenting time calcula...). The main area shows the 'Chang v. Smith' case (A7779) with a chat history. A file 'Financial report of Mr. and Mrs. Smith.pdf' (4 MB) is attached. The chat includes a question about generating a research memo, a confirmation of the research background, a 'Research facts' section with a green checkmark, and a 'Research question' input field. The question is: 'Does a significant disparity in income between parents affect the determination of the reasonableness of child support obligations?'. Below the input are buttons for 'Rephrase', 'Clear', 'Cancel', and 'Submit'. A floating window on the right shows a document icon with the text 'How has the doctori... Legal research memo'.

It looks like you want to conduct legal research. Would you like me to generate a research memo on this topic?

Yes

Great, can you please confirm the relevant background for your research?

Research facts

I represent a client where there is a claim against her for child support. She earns $60,000 a year but the recipient earns $1,500,000 a year. We are concerned about the reasonableness of the claim for spousal and child support given the disparity in income.

Thank you. Please confirm the correct phrasing of the question below.
